I was just thinking today while walking my dog that I have a fairly extensive collection of music in Spotify. But the day that I stop paying the subscription, the music is gone. I have a huge CD collection (dating myself here a bit) and I was thinking one day my son my like those songs. I could let him have my collection. Not with Spotify.

And it really made me realize that NFTs and music go hand in hand. Basically, owning music like we used to back in the 90s would be so cool. It dawned on me that there are some other really cool aspects of NFT music:

1). Serialize releases. Everyone knows that the first print of a book or visual artwork is often times the most valuable. Could this be the case with NFTs?

2). You can trade the music. Back in my day, I'd go to used CD shops and just flip through aisles of CDs. Not the same, but the idea of buying limited edition songs or just getting rid of songs you no longer like is pretty cool.

3). Related to (1) but special releases with limited editions...that could be used in point (2)

So I look forward to an ownership model. Wonder if anyone would create a music player for our NFT music (maybe GME)?

And finally, do any of you see similar situations like this with areas that interest you?
