Does it feel odd to anyone else that on this sub we go ahead and get excited for some kind of economic collapse?

I completely understand that if something were to happen it would be the elites who are to blame, but at the end of the day a collapse like this only effects those who cannot withstand an event like this. I see headlines of pensions almost going bust and this gme sub posts how things are about to get spicy.

Take a second to think of the larger implications of an event like this and remember it is so much larger than we can even fathom.

By no means am I advocating for us to not continue what we have been doing but I am hoping that each person here can take a second to think before they go ahead and post something to understand the ramifications of what this could mean for average, every day people. Perspective is everything
