All I can say is that since I bought my first shares of GME in early January'21, I have been able to save so much more money than usual, by having the goal of buying and DRSing as many shares as I can. My GME shares have become my savings account, and its more than I've ever had. It took me awhile, but I also am waaayyy better at buying and selling stocks because I've been on this ride for so long, have paid close attention, bought as low as $58 and as high as $310, but managed to slowly average down every time. In the past I'd be way more likely to buy as its going up and sell as its going down. It's taken me this whole time but I'm hoping to get to xxxx. Dips=Zen. Rips=Zen. FUD= Zen. Options TA=Zen. I just wait for a dip and buy a little more. Every time. Someone also had a good point about buying through Computershare, just wake up monday, buy a little and it will clear by Friday. NFA. Has this been the case for others as well?
