For starters I am all for DRS and am 50% for disclosure. My belief is that upon 100% total DRS they will then have to buy all the remaining shares (my other 50% etc) causing price runout while we simultaneously have the float locked..

However help me understand how this would be treated differently then a buyout?

At 100% if we pull the trigger then wouldn't GME just delist and shares become null to sell, instead replaced with the credit of share price * shares held within broker?

As was the case with Twitter?

Just trying to differentiate a buyout vs forced short squeeze.

#dontForget Porsche purchased 40%? of VW pre squeeze.. so there is some potential to buyout ignition right?!

Regardless we will see
