I'm curious about your opinions on Ryan Cohen's motives with giving GameStop employees shares of GME. As a spring 2021 hodler with bi-monthly auto purchases in computer share, I have no doubts in GameStop or the fundamentals of the company. Just entertain my thoughts for a sec. If they believe we're going to the moon with a mother squeeze, wouldn't that make them risk losing all of their employees once they're bank accounts look like phone numbers with the shares they've been given by the company? Or do you think they expect their employees won't want to leave despite having sudden generational wealth? As a logical thinker, this is my dilemma.
