

Title: The community has turned into a circlejerk of cynicism, open message to all the subreddits
Author: The_Wizard_of_Shut
Created 2022-10-29 12:53:22 UTC
Permalink: /r/GME/comments/ygiw8r/the_community_has_turned_into_a_circlejerk_of/
Url: https://www.reddit.com/r/GME/comments/ygiw8r/the_community_has_turned_into_a_circlejerk_of/

I am specifically making this thread because of the recent response to /u/Ortex_Official

I am not saying that everyone should just blindly believe every single word anyone ever says, but what really bothers me is this actual cult mentality of so many people, demanding answers while being unaccepting of any answers.

The same exact phrases loudly regurgitated like some sort of gospel.

CRIME!

LIES!

MLM PROPAGANDA!

If you're one of those people who just call every single person out without consideration, are you any better? Is there really any answer you'd accept that didn't already conform to what you believe in?

I want to try to portray the good and the bad of what sort of messages the major subs are sending, and I want everyone as a person to just reconsider their part.

Not because I as some random-ass nobody think I know better, and not because I believe everything should be different, but because I think it can't hurt to be open to new ideas and consider different possibilities.

- Simple and clear messages like "DRS", "ComputerShare" travel farther
- Being interested in the topic doesn't necessarily mean willingness to delve deep into due diligences
- Simple messages can be very divisive, being interesting and attractive to some, while repelling others, depending on their existing beliefs
- Repeating the same messages such as "DRS" ensures the important topics do not get drowned out
- Repeating less clear messages that depend on context, such as "crime" or "lies" propagates an atmosphere of cynicism, where nothing can be taken seriously, which can also harm the rest of the message
- Value of immutability is that the important messages will stick around and won't be misunderstood
- It is not possible to be nothing but immutable, I'm sure many of you including myself wouldn't be here today, if we weren't open to the theory behind GME for example

Following is my subjective summary.

The best part I think is that the messages critical to the theory have never been forgotten. There are a shit-ton of shorts. Shorts must close. DRS.

On the negative side, it seems to me that a lot of people and public figures are disassociating from the GME community, due to the fact that everyone who doesn't partake in the regular gospel is called out as a FUD spreader or whatnot.

Let's assume Ortex is being truthful for a moment. Since the very beginning, I've seen them bombarded with threats and callouts. What would you do in the position of Ortex, the company, and their spokespeople?

Would you have any incentive to keep interacting with a community, most of whom is hostile towards you?

I don't know, I don't think it hurts to take everything with a grain of salt, but going into every topic expecting to be lied to won't do anything.

If you really want people to take you and the community seriously, be respectable and open-minded, everything from Ortex so far that I've seen is either data or opinion.

Does this really warrant the current public response?

If you really want big names to interact with the community, if you really care about hard facts and data, act like it.