Patrick Byrne is watching Reddit. He sees that his stuff is starting to be resurfaced. In a recent article he states:

"Start at 41:30 and watch 10 minutes."

Then it got to the 51 minute mark....

He talks about how China doesn't have FTDs... and how their market handles everything.

Then it clicked again for me...

Ryan Cohen tweeted in June he had a crush on China. He followed up with their high speed rail system which in itself I'm not sure, but the crush on China part could also be seen as how efficient their market structures are...
