

Title: Serious question, does the push for 100% DRSing stock mean this movement has lost?

Ok so the gamestop saga has been going on for a few years now and over the last year or so almost all the energy has been put into DRSing all the float to force a squeeze.... so my question is, does this really mean the movement has lost? What I mean is, if you lock the entire float of any stock via DRS , it should cause a squeeze. Any stock. So if this works, it's not because all the endless DD of the past 2 years was right, it will be because the float has entirely been locked and that's nothing specific to gamestop.

Just curious

Edited to clarify the drs push has been going on for about a year not two
