You see, we are ■, we are the people who work at Wendy's and went to buy a lottery ticket every week: knowing we would lose.

We buy booze and dumb stuff, we don't care; we hope, but we know we will probably be poor the rest of our lives.

Now we don't buy the lottery anymore: we buy GME.

We don't care what happens, we would lose that money anyways. So we buy and HODL.

We know of no sell button, we are many, we deposit weekly, we don't listen to "reason".

This is a growing movement, and we keep buying and DRS more and more because some tard on the internet told us so.

They don't realize how long this will go on, how "parabolic" this will go, this is not investing: this is addiction, they fueled it, it backfires now.

I might learn how to sell when I win a phone number, untill that day I even don't know how much stonks I have. I don't care.

That's who they are up against.
