

Title: So riddle me this - when we get plunges, like just now with CPI announced, who is instantaneously buying all those shares?

E.g. I panic sell thousands of GME shares and same in all my other stocks at the announcement of CPI figures. Who the hell has buy orders queued all the way down to -5% on literally every last one of them before the trading day has even opened?

We just think 'crime' when plunges happen but every seller has to have a buyer.

It's all too convenient surely that market movements like this happen {made to scare people} but surely it's just another sign that the entire thing is orchestrated by algos?
